

Public Law

City Attorneys, Water Representatives and More

GCR specializes in representing cities, redevelopment agencies, special districts, community colleges, and other governmental and education entities. Serving as city attorneys, agency counsel, general counsel, and special and public finance counsel, GCR provides a full range of legal services required by entities of all sizes. With particular expertise in strategic planning and the reform and restructuring of municipal and governmental ordinances, GCR attorneys are experts in effectively implementing the policy directives of the council, governing board or legislative body of each client.

GCR attorneys understand the delicate relationship between agency executives, staff and hearing officers, and can act as both political advocates and tenacious litigators in local, state and federal matters. Most importantly, GCR attorneys are aware of and committed to effective advocacy of the policy objectives and values of each client.

The firm also has extensive experience representing water districts, specifically handling all aspects of water law, water rights, pipeline construction, right of way issues and easement acquisition, erosion control and other related utility issues.

GCR attorneys have a passion for municipal and special district policies and go the extra mile to make meaningful differences in the communities they serve. Attorneys include general counsel for cities and water districts and a former assistant attorney general for the state of Texas.
